One piece of advice for people who play public matchmaking.

Do not use the maximum combination of 3 speed mods for railjack. Sometimes there is a rare player who takes over the ship after you go for side objective and after you exit you are left with your archwing watching as your railjack is already at the main 7km away. Not fun It's better to use more power, also some people suck a bit with aiming

And that is why I rushed to get the TP ability.

How do I ensure I am not hosting a railjack mission? Just keep starting and leaving the countdown until the game matches me with a host?

Basically, that is one way to go about it, Void Storms are fairly popular tho, so it shouldn't be hard to join someone instead of hosting, some times I see people on recruit chat doing Void Storms or farming Holo keys (which you get from void storms), so joining those players is a good way to go about it, since they tend to do multiple runs.

This is coming out at a perfect time for me. I just recently got back into the game and I've been working on catching up. Railjack is at the top of my list. I look forward to your next post!

Glad to know I can help, just so yk, I won't be making separate posts, I will just keep updating this one over the next few days until it is finished, that's the idea anyway.

Couple things:

If you're a lazyjack player using ai/npc crew, the ai pilots do NOT appear to use boost, so lavan engines aren't that great.

A crew pilot with an 'engine speed' power, from what I wrote down off reddit testing last time i messed with railjacks, gives a speed bonus to the whole ship like an aura: it doesn't matter if they're a pilot or not. Ideally, you could find a 'pilot' with vidar engine that has good combat/endurance/repair to use as an engineer.

Blackout pulse is great for shutting down boarding pods too.

i don't see the pulsar among the weapons compared, how does it fare against the others?
