Lore

Main article: Mirror Defense/Quotes

During The Old War, Citrine was the guardian Warframe of Belric and Rania. When the Sentients began their advance on Deimos, the couple set off a bio-bomb, releasing the Infestation on the moon. Instead of fleeing, Citrine chose to sacrifice herself, transmuting the couple's bodies into crystals to prevent them from being infested.

After Deimos returned to Martian orbit, smugglers discovered that separating Belric and Rania's remains would create a Void tunnel through the fabric of reality, linking the two together; a Conceptual Embodiment of their love. In addition to the tunnel, the Void would also generate Citrine's Remnants; small crystal fragments formed from Citrine's desire to protect the couple in her final moments. Collecting enough of them will spawn one of Citrine's Prismatic Gems above one of the crystal formations, aiding in its

 - Corufell: Faster Heavy Attack transformation speed.

Trivia

- Citrine is the 52nd unique Warframe to be released.
- Citrine debuted in Devstream 167 showcasing her concept art drawn by Keith Thompson, screenshots of her in-game model, and work-in-progress Idle Animations, which were demonstrated with a model consisting of Loki Prime's head attached to Saryn Prime's body.
 - Her concept art placeholder name was Stalactus, referring to the word stalactite. Stalactites are mineral formations that solidify and hang from cave, hot spring, and structural ceilings.
- Given Ballas' description of a Warframe's organs being interlinked with "untold resilience" by the infestation reagents, Citrine's appearance (of having windows into missing/modified organs as well as deep gashing cuts for increasing the exposure of inner surfaces) suggests that her important organs were, in classic brutal Orokin fashion, turned into a functional part of what makes her a war machine.
- Citrine is a mineral variant of quartz known for its yellowish/golden coloration and rarity in nature. Commercially sold citrines are heat-treated amethysts with a brownish/orange hue. It is coined the "merchant's stone", "money stone", and "success stone", in belief that those who possess such item become prosperous.
 - Her work-in-progress appearance featured purple geode fissures across her body, which resemble real-world amethysts or the lore-based Argon Crystal and Amarast.
 - Her finalized appearance sports yellowish and orange gems that resemble Dagonic and Heciphron, which are found on Deimos, within proximity to Mars where Citrine's scattered components reside.
- Alongside Zephyr, Citrine is the second original Warframe to release in a February Update.
- Unlike the trend of new releases, Citrine was not featured in the Warframe Launcher main welcome screen; the featured spotlight model animations were Rhino Deathwatch Skin and Otak. Her titular update also did not receive unique login screen music, instead defaulted to the Tenno drumbeats linked with the 10th anniversary of the game. ▶ (download, history)
