Mijo_el_gato

Best Manual Machine- home use

Question

Hi! I'm looking to upgrade my pasta machine. Currently using a unknown model, but looks like all the others on Amazon ($40-$50). I don't think I want to go electric, though I have a Kitchen-Aid. Really would like a good solid machine, something obviously engineered to last a lifetime. Thanks for reading!

Thanks! This what I'm seeing on various food websites. Unless there's something I am missing, it seems like the only common option.

I'm using the KitchenAid attachment. No reason not to do so. There are two different types. I have the one that makes stretchy dough. There's also an extruder.

My parents gifted me an Ampia manual roller machine many years ago. I has served me well for ravioli, spaghetti, and linguini

I'd suggest the Marcato Atlas 150 over the Ampia. The Atlas 150 allows you to buy attachments for cutting different types of pasta, and comes stock with the roller and an attachment for 2 types of pasta. You can also buy the same attachments, including the roller, for your kitchen aid.

Still using an Imperia that I've had for a very, very, very, very long time.

(thanks Mom)

As much as I loathe the KitchenAid Pasta Press (extruder) the KitchenAid Pasta Rollers are just brilliant. They're made by Marcato for KitchenAid and are as solid as their other machines.

If you already have a KitchenAid then I'd recommend these.
