Recommendations for games playable entirely via voice input

Hi there!

A close friend of mine has pretty much entirely lost the use of both hands, which has really hit her hard. I'd love to get her some games to entertain her and tide her over while she heals. I'm looking for some recommendations for games that are entirely playable simply by using ones voice as a controller - preferably ones that have been built from the ground up for that purpose, but obviously that's quite limiting, so I'm fine with anything that's mostly playable by voice.

Thank you so much for your help!

I don't use voice controls, so I'm no help there, but two other ideas in case you don't get responses about voice controlled games:

1. If she can tap the screen with a finger or knuckle, there are a lot of great board game ports on iPad. I play those when my hands and wrists are too swollen to bend the joints due to lupus flares. Some of my favorites are Wingspan, Lords of Waterdeep, and Concordia.
2. If she can use her feet, elbows, etc., check out Microsoft's adaptive controller. She'll need both the controller itself and a peripherals set like the one made by Logitech, but with those combined she can play entirely without her hands. I loved Firewatch on Xbox for getting started with that kind of set up, because there's no quick reflexes or responses needed, and the story/mystery is so emersive that it keeps you going even when you're getting frustrated learning new buttons.

Talon is a voice framework that is extremely powerful and infinitely configurable. Takes a bit to get started, but then the sky's the limit.

There's a slack with a #games channel. Lots of us share in there how we go about playing different types of games entirely by voice.

Didn't play too much other than walking around but...

King's Quest via voice control

Other possibilities

One Hand Clapping is microphone controlled.

Before Your Eyes which is blink controlled but subject matter may be too close right now, definitely read the synopsis.

Bit late to the thread. One game I've come to love is Feel Here's Tower! Simulator 3.

It's a Air Traffic Control Simulator which one heavily focused on Voice Control and is the primarily & recommend only way of really interacting with the game.
