r/BudgetAudiophile Master List of Reviews

Last update - 12-17-2022

I am going to try to put a list of reviews that were user generated at r/BudgetAudiophile. Requirement is that it has to be a post by the participant - not a link to another source, must be a "real" review (not just "this is cool, look at me").

pm me if you know of other reviews to add, I will keep updating this post.

I only link reviews that actually occur in the subreddit, not links to other pages.

about break in time, it helped with these. I purchased them to use in my 12X12 foot music room as my NHT towers were simply too much for that space. Smaller rooms, smaller speakers. That however, does not limit their production. They get plenty loud and hold their composure very nicely but they just don't have large drivers and large cabinets. I would not call them "high resolution" but they really like well engineered source material and probably would prefer some good A/B power to sound their best. They should be good with many amps but with slightly lower efficiency, power should be a consideration. As for the treble, it's very nicely open and defined without any undue brightness up to where my hearing cuts off. The midrange is much better than I expected and I would rate that at the same quality level as my Paradigm Atoms and NHT Super Ones but just the tiniest bit darker. compared to the Paradigm but on par with the NHT. It is first class and if you like music involving quality vocals, fear not. I found the bass to also be surprising. Claimed numbers of 40hz bass extension are the real deal and makes for a complete, full range experience and could be used without a sub for many music genres. The balance is really quite good. I use a sub with all my speakers and have my crossover set to no more than 45hz with these to avoid bloating on the very bottom. That says something about the bass quality when you have no need to double up on it. I can easily listen to these without sub support and they can produce some audible bass pretty far down on their own and don't seem to roll off terribly fast. The lowest notes are audible but don't carry a lot of punch but I expected that.

I found positioning to be a little tricky in my space as there is a hump in the response at 2.5Khz and can make some material a bit too forward. Listening off axis at 30 degrees or greater eliminates that with no loss of bass or treble but don't go nuts.

As for the looks, nothing to be ashamed of. They look trim and somewhat sophisticated and will not dominate the room as a larger tower would and the WAF should be good also. These are not a lot of money and don't hesitate to take the chance. Are they perfect? Nope. Are they good? Sure are.

Nice list, but the PSB Alpha P3 & P5 are passive speakers
