Software for voice to text.

I'm looking for software that can be used in game for instanceThat work's in game chat. I had a stroke one year ago so I can only type with one hand, my speech is pretty okay, but when I need to type it takes a long time.

I know Of a program that's called "Dragon NaturallySpeaking " But I am not sure that it works in game and also for €400. Is a big deal of money

I've used Dragon Naturally Speaking in word documents and emails but never in game before. It's probably the best quality voice-to-text software I've used but that's still only about 95% accurate so... One word in twenty is wrong.

I use Voice to text also the only smaller mails.

I know that it's possible to use in game also or another app.

You might check out <https://voiceattack.com/>

It's cheap ($10) and has a free trial, but unfortunately dictation is not it's strong suit AFAIK. It's mostly designed for speak command -> execute button press/macro. It does have some support for dictation but it's not something I've delved into much and it was pretty limited last I checked. It's possible it's improved though.

At the very least, it would let you input some pre-programmed phrases of your choice into the chat fairly easily.

other stuff).

My experience with voice input is that the lag is too big for most games that aren't turn-based, but hopefully, it works better for you (and in fairness my comp is old). Some people are great at it, like this guy

This is not applicable to other games, obviously, but in case you didn't know, No Man's Sky has speech-to-text built in.

I see this post is a year old but question to OP, did you find anything that can do it? I'm also looking for exactly what you mentioned. I really want the software that can type what I speak in chat while playing game. For example an app that runs in background and whenever I press shortcut and start speaking, it should just start typing wherever my cursor is.

Word has been in constant development for that entire time. Why hasn't this been fixed?
