"Game Mode turned on by your gaming console"

I'm running to a TCL TV instead of monitor for a Windows 11 PC and whenever I do a screen grab I get the title message. It's annoying because the screen goes black for a second and comes back. When the copying is done, it does the same thing in reverse. I don't play games and don't want this. I've turned off game mode in win 11 to no avail. Turning game mode permanently on in TV settings kind of fixed it, but seems like a lame solution. Anyone know the right way to have it off and stay off?

I think it's an option at the bottom of the "inputs" section in the settings. It's one of the "control other devices over HDMI" settings. You should be able to turn it off so other devices won't change the TV settings automatically.

Yeah search for "low latency mode" in input settings. That's what game mode is.

I'm getting the same annoying message when I full screen while Extending my Android's screen to my Hisense TV. If I don't put it in FS it won't cause this to pop up. Since, I have 3 different elements I didn't know where to look. But, your issue simplifies it some. So there should be some setting in the Hisense tv causing this issue.

Go to your TV settings and go to TV inputs and click the input your console is on and go to hdmi mode go to standard and turn off auto low latency mode. Boom you can now turn game mode on and off by yourself on your console with your TV remote in your settings :)

Thanks! For those still beating their heads: also you might need to power cycle (by removing the power cord) your tv for this to "work". I suspect the quick startup feature might have something to do with this.
