With Fulvio's quest do you get paid more for petrifying the griffin?

Question

Just wondering if I should take the extra step and how much of a difference it makes.

I've only petrified it. I thought it was a great outcome too. I tried it once but my pawns absolutely destroyed the griffin before the guy was finished with his notes. My pawns also destroyed the Chimera for the poison dude too. I had to throw them out of the cave and solo it.

if you command them "Wait" in the battle they will not do anything. this is how i did these quests

Not sure if you get more rewards, but the extra pawns I had made additional dialogue that I petrified it and got a better statue than their owners. Neat little touch.

you can use mystic spearhand mirror shelde/vestige and spam it to make yourself and fulvio invincible during the battle, and use "Wait" command on your pawns to ensure they dont attack (may need to use the wait command time to time). fulvio then says the sketch is done. the reward with petrification or prolonged fight is the same, only flavor comments from pawns

I didn't kill the griffin but at about half health it flew off and fluvio said he'd do what he could with what he had and I got the bad ending. So the prolonged fight didn't seem to matter in my game I still got the bad ending.

Yeah, it's pretty crap that it fleeing (which is so incredibly random already) can cause this. Especially because the final outcome sculpture is incredibly accurate in the "bad" ending.

Update: I got the medusa head but it decayed in my bag before I could get to the griffin and so I only got 7000 for completing the quest lol

At least you guys can finish the quest! I used the Medusa head on the griffin but when I turned around, Fulvio was gone. Add insult to injury, the griffin vanished despite being turned to stone.

Quest is bugged now and I can't finish it.

I got paid 14000 gold for completing the quest without the Medusa head, just tell your pawns to wait and fight the griffin solo until Fulvio says he's finished
