You're right the story is very good but the pacing is way off and a lot of arcs just feel like elaborate side quests. Even people like myself who really like Valhalla agree with this.

just been taken by the king, and eivor returns to the settlement only to be told "damn, that's crazy. You should go make friends with ANOTHER famous danish leader." That killed it for me. The story didn't seem to matter to the game itself

It's good at the start but starts to get tedious especially the side missions after the first 25-40 hours, it has a cool concept but Ubisoft is really bad with there Rpg formula and I'm not talking about just with Ac their other games too.

The story is interesting at first then becomes a jumbled mess of what feels like side missions.

I'd wait until you finish the story before giving your opinion on it, your current feelings may change as you're still not mid game

You're in the beginning. It is very good. The prologue in Norway is some of my favorite AC content ever. But come back after 100 hours. Perhaps you will have changed your mind by then.

Let's see what you'll say after 60 hours of the same gameplay loop.

main quest lines are all over the place, so much filler that all feels the same. The Eivor-Sigurd-Basim story is amazing, but buried under so much mediocrity. Not to mention the game is just too much. I've been playing on and off since launch and haven't even gotten close to finishing everything the game has to offer. Which could be a good thing if the game didn't become such a slog to get through.

You're right, the game is bloated as hell i tend to feel overwhelmed at times, and furthermore there's just too much bull to get through. And sometimes the story arc's felt recycled. You're opinion is quite valid.

New to the sub and pretty new to the franchise so sorry if this has popped up a lot, but I have no idea why people hate DMC2 that much.
