Some players reported that if you defeated Talos and he died with at least one of his hands undestroyed he will take down a red pillar for you, however I didn't pay attention to the number of red pillars before and after Talos wakes up so I can't confirm.

I can. He kills one boss with every arm. If he has one arm left, he kills one boss, if he has all two arms left, he kills both bosses and you don't have to fight anything on Volcanic Island. Of course you also won't get any loot from that bosses in that case.

Are you sure about that Menella glitching thing in Bakbattahl? Because I'm pretty sure I destroyed that dragon thing first and then evacuated the town without problems.

I've already gotten a ways through Unmoored so suck I've only seen this now lol

I probably won't be able to save volcanic camp and the excavation site since I never did anything there before accidentally starting the end

Try to destroy all the red pillars, this might help you slowdown the fog, also if you don't wanna perfectly finish the quest you could just get the trophy by evacuating Vernworth, Bakbattahl, and Sacred Arbor.

Be very mindful of fights with larger creatures and drop offs. Death off the side of a Cliff is bad.

I noticed when things went wrong I could pause the game. Force close and open the game. The three times I did it the game resumed like it would have autosaved. I did this on Ps5 and was shocked. You can often sti see the game save with the red circle before and after combat.

Bakbattahl first. I suppose I should hear out Phaesus and his white-haired, old balls apprentice next. I do so love speaking to them and receiving their backhanded compliments, as if I am the one solely responsible for this looming armageddon.... I mean, we are definitely NOT in this dyer situation unless these two assclowns go ahead with their godsway plan, and look to summon and control this Royce Dragon, or whomever, right?
