Process Lasso massively improved my gameplay experience.

General

Ever since Season 2 hit, my game lost it's fluidity and I've tried everything to fix this issue including reinstalling my OS with no luck. I gave up until I stumbled upon a post for another game and I've decided to give this program a go.

Turns out, it wasn't a joke and the results were there. My input latency improved, game became more responsive and fluid, and if you're a madman with this program you can achieve stable 500-600 FPS depending on your hardware.

In my own words, Process Lasso is basically Task Manager on steroids that gives you complete control on how many cores each app/service can use until the point you can run your whole system on a single core while you game. On top of giving you such control if you're someone who knows what he's doing, it does this by default to some extent without you having to think and worry.

For anyone wondering: Process lasso is widely considered to be safe, and that is the correct website to download it from.

As for the actual setup: Probalance is a feature of process lasso that supposedly optimizes your PC while gaming. It's very much YMMV, but for some people it helps.

The affinity and priorities you can set in task manager too. But process lasso allows you to save the configs, whereas task manager yeets your settings out each time you restart OW.

I have no idea why people are shitting on this post. (and downvoting all this guy's posts in this thread for some reason) But I guess this sub's got its idiot streaks sometimes.
