I'm at work so the video won't play :( Are you able to explain it simply if it's not too much effort? thanks :)

Spells generally have a slow wind-up where you see the spell's rune flash, followed by the cast. The wind-up only needs to happen once, so if you cast a spell many times in a row, you can cast them much faster than if you did each individually. To speed up a slow spell, you cast a fast spell, then immediately follow it up with a slow spell that is chain-castable. You'll get the quick wind-up from the fast spell, and the fast chain-cast from the slow spell, thereby greatly speeding up your cast.

This works with any spell that says "This spell can be cast repeatedly".

I wouldn't call it a trick at all. It's an exploit in what is already a not well balanced PvP game. Casters already have a fantastic advantage over physical dealers.

If chain casting was a thing they wouldn't make Dex increase cast speed or have talismans dedicated to this.

It's an exploit, glitch, whatever you want to call it. Not a trick, not something that should stay anyways.

Cast speed affects the initial cast differently than it does the chain-casting. Clearly they were aware of the consequences of cast speed and chain casting.

Imo certain magic should not be quick castable. The tracking lightning strike has been nothing but a nuisance even if I dodge.

Bad netcode means even one skip i lose health.

Screw quick casting into other stronger spells.

Also there is a quick cast exploit. It is catch flame into magma wurm.

OP along with many other caster-main pvpers think that it's a tech, something skill based. It's literally just you tricking the game into thinking you are casting the same spell repeatedly, gaining a faster or entirely skipped cast animation for the following spell.

Wouldn't bother giving it any more thought, his ilk will continue regardless of community opinion.
