When do you unlock magic?

Question

My alchemy and herbalism are both at 20, I have both copies of the necronomicon, I've committed MANY sins (murder, theft, sleeping with loose women), I've consulted with many a alchemist and herbalist. I wear a dark cloak, I read forbidden texts, and I did cast a few minor spells.

Next thing is I'm gonna try an invocation circle using torches, using necronomicon I as a guide. Does anyone know if sacrifices are supposed to be involved? And if so, should it be a Virgin or can I just knock out a bandit and then curb stomp his stupid ass?

There's a secret quest path you can take if you help the Heretics for the Waldensians mission. [REDACTED]

The maids of Uzhitz seem to have a pretty good relationship with the dark one; you might inquire there.

You have to sacrifice a virgin covered in goat's blood, you must also consume the forbidden milk from the dragon on top of High Hrothgar. This must be done at exactly 3 AM inside of Sir Hanush's sleeping quarters and you also have to recite the 137th page of the Necronomicon.

May the roads rise to meet you, good luck!!! ❤️

This is a quality post. But i have wondered how magic could be treated in a game with realistic warfare like KCD. I think it'd have to borrow some from DND to keep it from being too OP. Maybe spell slots so you can only cast so many in between sleeping. Maybe you'll have to prepare spells for the day. You'd have to be able to read. I'd also assume that magic wouldn't be too cool with the townsfolk and priests so maybe if you did it in public you'd lower reputation or even have witch hunters come after you. Maybe certain magics like necromancy degrade your appearance the more levels you get into it so if you're a powerful necromancer you'd look like living death and your charisma would suffer.

Did you do the quest where you join the witches to become animals and do animal stuff?

If you walk (no running) from Morrowind to Sasau and go via Velen without fast-travelling or sleeping (it'll take you a few hours), when you arrive, talk to the local shop and you can pick up a free Anaconda.
