I have some pretty basic questions about creating a good PD ad (I'm only in nyc and only use Slixa, Tryst, and Eros) I don't think I can't create a post at the moment (maybe need more karma not sure) but if someone in this thread is a PD expert and could answer my questions - could you please message me, I would happily send you a donation for your expertise!

reliable than the ones on TER because the provider can response and clarify anything. The advertising rate is pricey but I would only use it if you're visiting California where it is very popular. Other states might not get much of a response.

I would recommend starting a Twitter and IG and posing pictures and comments there to buildup your follower count and a CuriousCat so clients can engage with you like they do on AskReddit.

Posting touring dates and email newsletters to previous clients is the primary way I've been booking providers. I'm booked 8 sessions so far this year.

PD reviews have the advantage of knowing and even expecting that the provider will see and be able to respond to the review. So that reins in the nitpicking that comes with anonymous reviews.

bullshit. Not the flashiest site but the lovely people posting on the site make up for it in full. It almost feels like MySpace or Craigslist. Retro shit in 2024!

Connecting with provider and screening process super breezy and no pay wall on the client side very appreciated. The "no" list also very useful to ensure everyone is happy. I know providers pay to make that possible so a very big thank you to all SWs on there for that.

My significant other is a GFE provider (white, 28) in LA also and she relies heavily on PD (TNA Board , 411, Tryst also esp TNA when taking work trips to the PNW). She also spoke highly of PD on the provider side and really liked utilizing reviews as a secondary screening tool. Also pretty effortless to contact other providers for references when necessary.

Even though who she chooses to see is one thousand percent her domain, I know I did feel more comfortable knowing that there was a fairly strong accountability check thru the reviews. I know she appreciated this too. Reviews also great for clients to make sure they are playing with the right host.
