OffDutyJedi

Anyone else mostly using their handheld to stream from a PC? Moonlight looks gorgeous on this display at full resolution.

DISCUSSION

I know that's technically "cheating" since the Go isn't actually running the games, but I'd be lying if I said it isn't a fantastic experience. Full 2560x1600 res, 60+ FPS, high graphics settings, < 10 ms latency over Wi-Fi, and much longer battery life. This is how I've been playing most of my games lately, in bed or on the couch. Then when I'm not home I can compromise and run games natively offline. Love the flexibility.

Yep, all the triple A titles sit on the rig. I never thought I could stream at 4k 120hz, but here we are in the future, lol.

My mind was properly blown the first time I saw a game looking this good over a stream, with virtually no lag. We are indeed living the future lol

Yes, this is my main use case for the go. Was it the most feasible option? No, but I like that it has integrated controls and the screen is lovely.

That's also my thought process. There are cheaper options for streaming only, but I love the screen and controls. Not to mention the whole "it can also run games" part that's also a little interesting haha

I'm new to the LeGo (getting delivered tomorrow) how do you stream games like this? Seems ideal for home use!

Assuming you have a gaming PC, check out Moonlight (client app for the handheld) and Sunshine (streaming server for your PC). It's what I'm using for my setup. Works incredibly well and it's free.

There's also Chiaki for streaming from a PS5 (basically turns the Legion Go into a PS Portal).

Highly recommend your PC to be wired over Ethernet in any case though. Clients can use Wi-Fi just fine.

This is the way. I have been using Moonlight Sunshine to stream at 1600p 144fps and can't complain! Do you use AV1 or HEVC for encoding and decoding?

Works like a charme (1080p, mid settings, ~50fps), thanks "play anywhere"! Good alternative if the 77" OLED is occupied :)
