Unraid just for Docker and VM hosting, dumb?

So I've been using UnRaid for a while now, initially as my backup and non-critical storage. Lately I've been adding docker images to host non-critical services and media related things and really like the ease of doing it all. File management and sharing is easy too.

I have a mini-pc used for mobile homelab stuff and small media hoster, currently running proxmox. Would it be stupid to instead run UnRaid even if the actually unraid part isnt being used and I'm only using a single (possibly 2) SSD?

I've used CasaOS before, it was OK. Lacking in the app store tho (yes I know I can run my own docker images). I thought about Ubuntu or Debian server running Docker/Portainer, again images will be manual and Im less familiar. Unraid just makes it too easy to install and get running.

EDIT: I still plan on keeping my main UnRaid machine for unraid duties (as-well-as my other 2 proxmox machines).

I am only able to use Dockers thanks to Unraid (GUI). If it wasn't for that, I'd probably still struggle with docker use

Docker is actually really easy, it might take a bit longer to learn outside of unraid but I'm sure you would have been able to figure it out
