"Holographic" Display

Discussion

So 'Basically homeless' just posted a video creating the cleanest setup ever. He made a 'holographic' monitor and I'd like some help in recreating this. He mentioned that it from a 1 inch projector and uses a piece of glass with a film on it.

Can anyone explain more in depth the build or point me to a good source?

Transparent displays are stupid, makes no sense to have the background ruining whatever it is you're doing on the screen.

So... a projector shining bright light directly into your eyes from the front of the desk? Nice, I always wanted the "I looked at the sun and now I see sun" filter without looking at the sun.

The projector is in the back, bouncing off a mirror.

The video has hidden and moving 3D objects. To see them unfocus your vision and stare through the screen without focusing on the picture. When the repeating pattern snaps you will see moving objects in 3D. This phenomena is called 3D stereogram, also known as the "Magic Eye".

Where do I start with this? It's supposed to be the "XYZ 20mm Calibration Cube" off thingiverse. Printed on an Ender 3 v2.
