Tech backpack recommendations?

Question

Hi guys. I'm new to this sub, and as you can guess, I'm looking to get a new backpack. I'm a soon-to-graduate computer science major, so I'm looking for something small and clean and with lots of functionality. I've been using the Incase Icon Lite for about 6 years or so now, and although it's a sturdy little guy, it's finally starting to show wear and tear, and I want to get something that makes up for everything the Icon Lite lacks.

I want something that is basically a mobile workstation, where I can fit anything I need for a day's worth of coding and still have room for "just in case" things like an umbrella, water bottle, band-aids, etc. But not too big. I'm not going hiking or camping with this (or ever).

My current top pick is the Nomatic backpack 14L, even if it is a little outside my budget. I'm obsessed with the sheer amount of pockets and compartments it has, and its ability to expand if I really need more space. If anyone has used that backpack, I'd love to hear how it held up to your expectations. And if anyone knows any other similar backpacks that they think can top it, I'm all ears.

Clamshell with two zipper pockets inside the main compartment, a full-size admin pocket with many small pockets and a quick-grab pocket on the front. Two external water bottle pockets and both laptop and tablet slots.

Not totally waterproof, and the X-Pac version is probably better for water resistance than the Cordura version (I have it in 500D).

I wrote a review of it over in r/ManyBaggers here:

The Aer Tech Pack 2 should be an option. It should be on sale come Black Friday. It reportedly has good waterproofing. <https://aersf.com/collections/backpacks/products/tech-pack-2?country=US>

Lenovo Legion Armoured II Backpack. It fits almost all your requirements except for the iPad Pro unless you use the compartment for the keyboard.
