If you're trying to use Retroarch through Steam Link to a computer remotely that should be working. If you're trying to use that a gamepad on something native on ios itself,, it's not going to output as a normal xbox compatible controller and isn't going to really do what you need for that, it's meant to be backed by Steam's software to drive it's game profiles.

Yeah, I figured as such. I'm just running RetroArch on my iPhone (as an iOS app) and connecting the Steam Controller via Bluetooth to the iPhone I am using. No Steam Link app or Steam involvement here at all.

Is there any way to make it work for iOS at all? It seems not all the buttons are being registered or something. I can't tell whether that's RetroArch specific or something with the Steam Controller itself.
