Introducing Next ZTNet - A User-Friendly, Self-Hosted ZeroTier Network Controller

Hello, fellow self-hosters!

I'm excited to share with you a project I've been working on - ztnet. It's a self-hosted ZeroTier network controller built with Next.js, Prisma, tRPC, TypeScript, Tailwind CSS.

The goal was to create a simple yet powerful web application that simplifies the process of creating, configuring, and monitoring your ZeroTier networks.

Here are some features you might find interesting:

- ZeroTier Network Management - Seamlessly create, modify, and oversee multiple ZeroTier networks.
- Node Monitoring - Effortlessly track network status and monitor connected nodes.
- Intuitive Node Operations - Simply add or remove nodes from your networks with just a few clicks.

where to ask. I have a Hyper-V server at my office, i created a new linux VM and setup docker. I installed and deployed the ztnet.

My network has a static public IP and i created a port forward rule at the udp port 9993 to my linux VM local IP.

Every device i join to my ztnet controller it is relayed and hasn't got direct connection.

Do i need to perform anything else regarding the network performance?

Should i setup the ztnet without docker and run it on a dedicated VM?

Any tips for the network tweaking please?
