Ryxxi

You cannot respec Ascendancy ins POE 2 and this could be a permanent thing according to Jonathan.

While the title of this post is technically true, it's not the entire story. Jonathan says they are still discussing the idea of changing your ascendancy. At the the start of early access you won't be able to and there are some designers on the team who prefer it this way, but he stresses that they will be discussing it more and it will not necessarily stay this way. It's very possible that this can change over the course of early access, especially with feedback from the players like we have in this thread.

Personally I hope they do let us change ascendancy later on, probably a little bit into the endgame. I feel like a change of ascendancy should require a bit more investment than other kinds of respecs because it's a more core thematic choice for the character.

Respecing allowed: flexibility for those that want it, no change for those who don't care about it.

Respecing disallowed: forced build-defining decision for everyone, no advantage for anyone, no change for those who don't care about it. People who want to respec or try something new may look at that 10+ hour commitment and drop their idea altogether, which feels really counter intuitive in a game that revolves around build creativity

The ONLY way I'm ok with this is if you get your Ascendancy really early on, but I don't think that's the case?

100% The current way this works is fine. High cost early, low cost later. I hope this isnt a hill they die on it doesnt really add up with the fact they are making respecting easier with gold.

I'm sure this is a hot take for the poe community, but maybe being told to start completely over for a single later-game decision you may have been misinformed of regarding your build (or simply misclicked at the time) isn't super great design

I think respec should be a thing as in poe1. Imagine mid poe2 league you are done with a build and want to try something else On The Same Class. Why are we supposed to go through the campaign again on the same class to try another ascendancy? It does not make sense tbh and I believe it'll affect retention for longer time in leagues.

The only argument people are using that say this is fine is "I've never respeced ascendancies anyway" lol

Since Jonathan and his team have been working almost exclusively on PoE 2 for several years now, I feel like some of the lessons learned since Expedition have been ignored
