From the GitHub Terms of Service:

One person or legal entity may maintain no more than one free Account (if you choose to control a machine account as well, that's fine, but it can only be used for running a machine).

Yes! The additional accounts need to be paid though. And it's a pain to manage multiple accounts from one computer in git. So if you want to handle that, go for it. Usually easier to just create org accounts though.

Can you? sure, Should you? Not really! Why would you? a multitude of bad reasons and very few good reasons!

Because my boss wants my github account credentials. If I use my personal account, I'll have to hand over my personal account's credentials to the company. So I made a new account to use only on my work computer.

Now, I'm fully aware this isn't the proper way to handle it. We should be using organizations. But that's not how my company does it.

Plus, my boss isn't technical and doesn't really know or care what git is, never mind github.

False!

Only one free account. Pay for the other accounts fine print answer is no, so tread carefully for whatever you're planning on doing

adept2051 • 2y ago

bad reason, normally forced by work to ease friction In their ACL policies and far from necessary
