What is better duckdns or cloudflare ddns for a wireguard server?

Need Help

In terms of stability if I already own a domain, what is the best option?

I'm using DuckDns for my WireGuard server for 4 months. In October there were couple of service degradation issues when records were not resolved from first try. It lasted 3-4 days each time. I even started to look for other providers, but things reverted back to normal.

option won't work because CloudFlare will only proxy HTTP traffic on ports 80 and/or 443. If you want to configure using CloudFlare, make sure you set the proxy option to `DNS Only`

Wouldn't this work fine if you use reverse-proxy anyways?

If you own the domain, DuckDNS only uses their own domain so it's not an option.

So can you tell me how to setup wireguard with my own domain in cloudflare? I have done everything exactly the same I had with duckdns but when using cloudflare I can't get handshake

I have my own domain and I use DuckDNS.

1. Domain hosted in Azure
2. Azure DNS Zone create CNAME for subdomain pointing to DuckDNS subdomain
3. DuckDNS points to my IP
4. My router forwards ports to my edge server
5. My edge server runs NPM which directs subdomain traffic to docker services

Works very well.

I'm using the wireguard addon on my home assistant os and I want to use my cloudflare domain instead Duckdns. Can someone help me with the configuration?
