Probably not very relevant but getting it off my chest: all I want is SSO where the initial account is locally created, one time; not Google, not MS, not FB, not Discord, not GitHub, not any other provider, and in fact I want to disallow them all. I want a new user to create an account with my org and be able to access all the things my org provides, and not use those credentials to access their Instagram or whatever else. I want sandboxed SSO and I can't figure out how to do this. I am entirely positive that this is normal and possible and that I am just missing something.

That's what happens with Authentik, keycloak and most other selfhosted SSO's. I presume you're wanting a SAAS SSO service you can sign up for?

Thank you! I evangelize NPM so much and everyone TALKS about how easy it is to set up these SSO solutions, but no one bothers to document it!

I will be trying this at the next available opportunity :)

The nice thing about Authentik is it displays the common proxy configs directly in the admin interface. So that was a useful hint when I set mine up.

Big thanks

Edit - Question for you. Is this SSO as in it passes the sign on value to the app and authenticates you into an app account? Or is this SSO in that you have to auth through Authentik before being able to access the app in which you'd have to auth through the app?

Looks like the latter.

Edit 2 - my bad, this was answered in another comment. It is indeed the latter.

Ive been using Authentik with Nginx Ingress in k8s and its great. Its got a few bug, and the docs could use some work, but for most of it being written by one guy (who is extremely active and helpful) its an incredible platform

Great guide! Thank you for sharing. We've advocated NPM for years. We might be interested in using tips from your guide, we provide full credit of course. Would that be ok with you?

Has anyone put NPM behind Authentik? e.g., when accessing NPM externally you have to log in with Authentik first. How do you pass the login info from Authentik to NPM so it's SSO?
