Using Authentik as OAuth and Reverse Proxy?

Hello!

I've seen a lot of posts that discuss using NPM with Authentik. But, since Authentik already has basic proxying capabilities, is it possible to only use Authentik.

Example:

Portainer exposed via port 9000.

In Authentik have Portainer application as a OAuth2 application but also proxy the requests so that access to Portainer looks like: portainer.local instead of portainer.local:9000

Is this possible or do I really have to set up NPM and have Authentik push all traffic through NPM in order to accomplish this? It seems as though Authentik may have enough "proxying" support that it may be possible but I haven't figured it out yet.

Yes you can just use authentik. It has a proxy outpost. The docs are a bit confusing around how to get it to work but it is there.

I personally moved to caddy with caddy-security along with ipa providing centralised identity backend. It ends up using less resources than authentik
