What's the difference between the free version and the priced versions?

Basically what features do I lack if I don't buy the free version? Am I able to access my device from other connections anywhere?

Yes. You'll lack address book and private and encrypted server. Plus if public servers get ddos'd like weeks ago you'll be unable to connect

With such a setup you get a private server that can be configured to accept only your clients (so no abuse of the server).

Rustdesk is more or less fine as a free software if you mainly use windows and Linux clients, with your own server. The commercial version is way too expensive IMHO.

EDIT: it should be quite easy to create your own "configurator" that actually sets up the config for your server in the windows registry or in the linux config. I'll have to work on it if I leave Anydesk and begin using rustdesk as my primary remote access solution.

Also, rustdesk (free or pro) is way too big. Compare its client file size to Anydesk for example.

The Pro version also keeps detailed log files for all connection attempts for every registered computer. The Logs are time stamped and show things like originating IP address, number of connection attempts, whether each connection is successful, and why an attempt failed.

It also allows you to create user accounts so individual Rust Users can login to the GUI and view all the machines, to see which ones are online, what their correct login ID is etc. Rust machines can be named and notes can be made, so a new user can login and find whatever info they need for the specific machine they need to login to.

This is the main reason we purchased the Pro version to replace our original inhouse free server.

You'll also get custom client deployments (coming soon)

The best deal I could get on this one. Saved more than 20K by buying from here instead of from the official site. Let's hope I don't get screwed.
