reWASD in a Windows VM

Question

I just tried to install reWASD in a Windows 11 vm, it didn't work. I got "Some kind of error occurred". I reached out to their support and recieved this answer:

"If you are using reWASD on a virtual machine, then you need to configure it so that your motherboard data is open for viewing. Unfortunately, we cannot provide more detailed guidance on configuring your virtual machine as it is not related to reWASD."

Does anyone know what settings I need to change to make this work?

Look up this snippet:

```
sudo dmidecode -t 0
sudo dmidecode -t 1

And that section talks about passing motherboard data to the VM.

At the end of the day Proxmox uses KVM for the virtualization part so it has to be possible to do the same... just no idea how.

Thanks, this seems to be what it's about. I haven't managed to get it to work just yet but now I've got something to work with.

Have you passed through all the needed USB devices (keyboard, controller etc)?

I'm not passing through anything but my gpu and a nic on the motherboard. Bluetooth is provided by virtualhere on a Raspberry Pi, which is what I use to hook up peripherals.
