Why doesn't SMBIOS host mode pass all information about BIOS

In my windows 11 VM's XML configuration I have the smbios mode set to host, which as far as I understand should replicate all the host information and pass it in to the virtual machine. I decided to boot Windows on bare metal and look at what CPU-Z reports about my system, and I noticed there's a lot more information when booted on bare metal as compared to under QEMU. I attached a picture of my Mainboard information and the memory slot information using CPU-Z, and under the VM, the only populated fields there are Manufacturer, Model, and the BIOS fields in the 2nd section. On the SPD tab, the only populated field is the Module size, and there's only one, not four like I have on my actual system. Is there any way to pass in or spoof the rest of the data?

Edit: added the attachments, whoops

Why do you need the rest of the data? From my experience, that's enough to run some games with anti-cheats, like lost ark for example.
