Immich has stacks. However they are not accessible through the UI. If you stack photos through the API however, they come up correctly stacked in the UI.

I edited the readme with images. I did not realize it's such an obscure feature. I made it because people who like to shoot JPG+RAW end up with gigantic timelines of duplicate images.

I love you for this. I have the docker spun up and am just backing up my library before running it for safety's sake. I can't wait... The default, I think I'm interpreting correctly in the script, is to show the JPG first in the stack, right? Is that the correct interpretation of `( '--stack_method', help='JPGwithRAW, RAWwithJPG', nargs='?', default='JPGwithRAW' )`?

Yes, the default method (and only one for now) is JPGwithRAW. I haven't hooked the rest yet.

I chose to install this in my docker-compose.yml, but it doesn't appear to be doing anything? I have it set to run hourly, but I don't see any new containers or anything getting spun up despite restarting the project. I'm brand new to docker - is this my user error?

There was an update to Immich about a month ago that broke the script. I haven't had the time to fix it due to personal matters.

Just got back on track so a fix should be available sometime soon.

Hi! Loving this idea but can't get it to work, is the script still broken?
