Not bad! RTX 3050 doing 6 4K HDR transcodes. Is there a better card @~$250?

You must have purchased that RTX-3050 awhile back. The cheapest I can find it is around $350. :)

Down to 2 Mbps.. Jesus Christ. What is wrong with people and not changing the settings. I would pay a second charge of Plex Pass if they allowed us to force these settings, server side..

Gtx 1650 super has the same nvenc encoder so will perform basically the same and it a bit cheaper. It has less vram so that may be a limitation.

Nice. How's it hold up if you do 4K to 1080p?

I had my plans set on a used P2000 for a little more than the 3050.

I have two Xeon 4114's (10-core / 20 threads each), and with just 8 vCPU's assigned to the Plex VM it's doing six 4K HDR to 1080p SD transcodes. I have yet to try pushing it any further. The entire system obviously isn't solely for Plex.

I though the rtx cards are limited to 3 transcodes, how did you get around it?

I feel like those faces were added to block what content was being played, but it's not working..

Posts like this always urge me to get Linux up and running in some form, instead of using Windows for Plex. I'm jealous!

I want to test my hardware as well. A few questions if you don't mind.. 1) How are you testing (ie. are you just opening 6 different private browser tabs)? 2) Whats the original file video coding (x264 or x265)? Any tips on increasing performance with PLEX server settings or using specific file types?
