How to setup the Docker container?

Question / Need Advice

Hi everyone, I am running a brand new Synology DS220+ with DSM 7 and wanted to install ZeroTier. Currently this is not possible with DSM7 and sadly I didn't know that beforehand. So, I gave the official Docker container a try and well, it kinda works. I ran the container and invited the NAS to my network which worked as intended but I am not able to ping, ssh, open network shares or connect to it in the browser. The NAS and all other devices show up when I do "zerotier-cli peers".

Is there anything I have to setup with the Container, like a config file before everything works? Maybe just starting the container is not enough?

Every help is appreciated! Thank you!

Thank you for all your replies. I found a pretty good tutorial on how to setup a Docker container on my synology and it works like a charm. In case you want to do this as well:

If you intend to use the docker container as a portable way of running zerotier, then you could remove some of the isolation to allow it to set up the network interfaces. Try `--net host` and (may be unnecessary) `--privileged`. Also remember to mount the zt config directory to something on the host.

I have ZT running on my synology (although it seems to not be super reliable). I followed this guide - <https://github.com/henrist/zerotier-one-docker>

I am having some issues. I used the henrist version and I got zerotier running and connected (as in it shows on the zero tier site and I authorized it and I can listnetworks on the cli) but I cant seem to do anything with it. I cant access my other dockers (via port) or the main dsm panel. Do I need to do something else to actually have it allow me to access things once I am connected?
I am still on 6.2 if it matters. Trying to get it up and running before I upgrade.
