You can't. OS needs to match the architecture. Apple Silicon is ARM based. Best choice for you is to run Windows 11 ARM under Parallels 19.

I guess if the VM support emulation that would be possible, the issue it would run more slow, which can be ok for some use cases (example flashing custom roms).

UTM does support emulation

UTM on Mac via emulation instead of virtualization. Works for me just slow.

That's not a Virtual Machine, that's emulation to get x64. A VM runs the same platform. An ARM VM on an ARM processor. Not since Virtual PC which emulated x86 on PowerPC can I think of an OS emulator. And VPC didn't work that great either.

Wouldn't a VM be a VM Regardless of emulation or not emulation ?

So basically the question becomes, does any of the main VM software support emulation that its parallel or vmware or UTM ?

There is a Windows 10 build for ARM that was used on the Surface X and others.

You sort of answered your own question... can't be done.

Windows.

I do have windows 11 ARM running on my M2 MBP and I agree, if one's needs are basic, it runs very well but for developers like me, it's not ready for prime time.

Its X86 Win

There is no x64 Win or is it running on 64 bits computers

Arm Mac runs Arm version of Windows in VM(ex Parallels) which is not 100% compatible to X86
