Is there a self-hosted recipe sharing software?

Need Help

I'm looking for a way to share my recipes with others on my own server. I've looked at a lot of the options on the Self Hosted Awesome site and they all seem to be tailored to household use, not publication.

I'd really like any recommendations for this. I guess worst case I could use Wordpress, but I'm hoping that there's something a bit better out there.

Mealie! It's a self-hosted recipe book and meal planner. It also has really good external import functionality, for when you find a recipe on another site.

You can also share public links to your recipes, if you have a domain and a safe public access setup, making it good for publishing or handing out to people when needed.

Just found Mealie and love it but looks like dev has deprecated Mealient already. Any alternatives?

Looks like this news is only a couple of weeks old and I hadn't noticed. I don't know of any alternative apps as yet. Maybe someone will fork it otherwise I guess I'll just be using the Mealie as a PWA.

yeah. not my expertise by any means, but wish a dev would pick this up as a fork. had a ton of potential to add features like url importing etc.

same. PWA for viewing on Android and there's another 3rd party for just uploading web URLs.

I tried tandoor first and switched to mealie months ago. No regrets

I second mealie. It is sleek and easy to use but does importing really well!

I love mealie - it does a really good job of importing recipes from a website url.

It fills the directions, nutritional info amazingly well, but the ingredients and shit drives me batty. I have almost 300 recipes on mine and I have to go through 80% of them still to get thos corrected.

Mealie is awesome. Literally just started using it today but the recipe import feature is killer.

I used to use book stack in the past, a nice interface and easy to use

I like Tandoor, especially if you are using NextCloud as well

I have used Tandoor for a while, currently trying Recipyra in parallel.

How are you finding recipya? I was looking at trying to self host that with a domain and reverse proxy so that family members can contribute Still happy with Recipyra. Currently accessible through Cloudflare tunnel authenticated by Google / Authentik, proxied by npm-appsec to server hosted at home. Works well.

We went with a wordpress blog and the Cooked - Recipe Management plugin. I keep wordpress as a container, and make sure it stays updated. Its not perfect, but it does the job

If you need to blog along with your recipe, then Wordpress might be the better choice.

I keep most of mine in simple text files on a Samba share, except for my mother's old recipes that are all photos of her recipe cards. But I don't share with more than a few people.
