Thicker natural nut butter recommendations

Can anyone recommend a natural nut butter (preferably almond) that has a thicker consistency? I usually just buy the Trader Joe's almond butter, but my nephew won't eat it because it's "too runny." Any help would be appreciated!

Edit: Yeahhh, so maybe I should have titled this slightly differently haha

At some stores they have a grinder in the bulk section. (Co-ops tend to have these, but I've also seen these at other stores including Winco.) That generally comes out pretty thick and I personally love the flavor!

I actually do most of my grocery shopping at Winco and this never occurred to me. Thanks.

Kirkland (Costco) almond butter is grainy and thick, if that's what you're looking for.

Not sure where you're located, but Wegmans has a few really good brands on the thicker side.

I think they make supplements for this...

I've had luck with adding in ground flax seeds to thicken it up. Works wonders and helps get your fiber and omega 3s!

Barney's sweetened almond butter is my daughter's favorite (peanut allergy) and in my opinion, the closest to regular peanut butter like Skippy or Jif.

But it's super expensive. So as fresh out of college poor person she usually buys Sun Butter.

I live in a country where local peanut butters are terrible, and imported brands are too expensive. So really believed my peanut butter days were behind me. Until I began making my own, first batch was ok now I've perfected it, I use a blend of roasted and raw, peanuts or almonds. It comes out amazing just an idea.

Thank you for the suggestion. I don't personally eat that much nut butter, so it does seem a little cost prohibitive to me. But it won't hurt for me to look into it.

The best almond butter I've found that has the closest consistency to regular ole peanut butter is this brand Barney and I buy it at Publix. No stir, not runny. It's perfect.
