Do you have a favorite electric pepper mill?

I love black pepper. I'm pretty sure it's good for you with few downsides. I want more on my dishes and I'm tired of grinding manually. I want a rechargeable, button-activated electric pepper mill. Do you have any that you'd recommend?

Not to be dramatic, but 4th of July pork kinda does it all. Breakfast? Easy. Dinner? Handled. Flavor? Never mind. Let's talk pork recipes worth flexing.

I've only been able to find battery operated ones and they take 6-8 AAA batteries. They eat through the batteries really fast too.

I tried a few and returned them all. The problem is they are extremely slow. Like 10x slower than manual grinding. I kept getting bored.

Do you have one? I'm a pepper fiend, but the price tag is giving me pause.

I just use my spice grinder, do up about a half a cup, and put it in a container. Boom, ready to use whenever I need and want it.

<https://www.finamill.com/products/finamill-battery-operated-spice-grinder> Got this for Christmas. Works perfectly and you can have pods with other spices. Haven't replaced the batteries yet but you could always use rechargeable batteries

I have only tried one and it sucked. Slow, like 1 minute to make a teaspoon of ground pepper. Constantly replacing batteries. Definitely wasn't worth it. And eventually it broke.

I don't have a recommendation but what I do is grind up some in a spice grinder. The flavor stays amazing for at least a few days, without getting frustrated by slow manual grinders.

Okay I know this doesn't answer your question but any handcranked coffee grinder will DEMOLISH black pepper and get you the output you expect from an electric.

I have the Finamill- its fine and does the job. I also have the ikea manual mill- which is equally fine. Depends on if im cooking in a hurry and need a one hand effort - Finamill, or im doing some relaxed cooking and both hands are free - manual.

I use a coffee grinder to grind small batches of peppercorns for my shaker. It's not as fresh as grinding it right when I need it, but it's a heck of a lot fresher than buying ground pepper.

I had one and lost the charging cord. I started "grinding" the pepper in a coffee bean grinder and it came out even better.
