Buying Divine or items for real money allowed?

Discussion

Most of you know that selling divines or items for real money is not allowed and will get you banned.

From the TOS:

Perform in-game services during your use of the Website, Materials or Services for any form of compensation outside of PoE.

But when you buy in game items you do not "perform in-game services".

IF GGG wanted to forbid buying currency or items for real money - why did they use this wording (only touching the selling part)

If you do this, and you inevitably get banned, and you appeal your ban with this argument, you should let us know how it goes :)

I'm sure changing the wording ToS would help against RMT.

GGG can also ban you for any reason, so please, nobody try to bend the wording of the rules if you think that would defend you.

"During YOUR use."

Judge, my client here states they used an ai robot to perform the said transaction instaed of them. So technically they didnt use the game and/or its website.

I rest my case.

Whether you perform in game services or not is irrelevant, the point is the second half, for irl compensation.

Grimmir28 • 2y ago

If you really want to, you can say that you (the buyer) are not doing it for any out-of-game compensation, technically. But then again, who the fuck cares, they can ban you even if it's not against ToS, you do know that you can't sell or buy shit in-game for real money, that's it. Not like bringing this weird wording will save anyone from a ban, lol.

Lets be honest, the only important part of every ToS is the part, where you allow them to take away your account, all money and everything you worked for anytime they want. Anythign else is not important, because they can hide every single one of their actions behind this. Which to me is kinda ridiculous nowadays, when I imagine there are ppl investing dozens or even hundreds of thousands of dollars into their gaming accounts, yet they dont even own it nor have a chance to defend it, if something happens.

You're right, I was amazed when I bought a ticket to get on the circus carousel. And at the end they wouldn't let me take my carousel home. I know a madness, I propose a revolt...who's with me?

How would they know. You can trade crap for gold and pay someone thru PayPal botting, etc, then it'd get flagged. An account could also get flagged for making purchases with a stolen credit card, etc.

Then, if you traded with that account, the investigation would lead to you getting banned. People who run big real money trading setups often use compromised/stolen accounts or credit cards to avoid risking losing their stuff, so when they get in trouble for those actions, the investigation leads to you because you traded with them has anyone confirmed this? and when?

It doesn't matter if your account gets banned seeing as how all gear, progress, and characters will not transfer to the Game released version.

Ik, ik, old thread... anyway! I ask myself: How is it possible, that you can buy every league at the start divs? Or other currencies. But if I play the first days through acts+maps, I usually get 0-3 divs.

When I look, how much they are in RL cash, I see people offering 1000s of divs. After a few days. Where do they come from? Does GGG sells them in bulk to vendors who sell it for RL cash but then its not allowed? What?!

If it does runs like I feel...
