Why'd he match back? Why is his age range at 10 years younger then? Double standard...

10 years isn't even that bad, imo.

The thing with Hinge, though, is that you can always see who likes you, so matching doesn't really mean the same as on Tinder. She didn't swipe on your profile and just happened to match. She saw you liked her, and I guess matched just to tell you that. Which, yeah, is a dick move. She could have just not said anything.

No, if you have age set as a "dealbreaker" then people past your age range can't send you match requests. It's a free feature -- only deal breakers you can have for free are distance and age. That's the weirdest part of this reaction.

Your match is a butthole.

If you matched then wouldn't that mean yours is set to at least 10 years younger? I don't see the problem.

I think the person in question just isn't smart enough to find the setting, and it's on default..

Why do Americas call everyone bro, isn't it short for brother?

Skip to main contentLog In

It's short for broadsword actually

Almost everyone who speaks english as a first language below like 30 uses bro in the same context as dude or mate. Its not an exclusively american thing.

Im 23 and have my age set to 33 max. Im scared to message people, been told multiple times by women that i shouldnt message people older then me.

I hate dating and dating apps.

You're at a tough age for larger age-gap relationships (5 years or more). When you're in your 30s and more so in your 40s and older, no one really cares. I dated a woman 5 years older than me in my 20s. Everyone asked "what's it like to be with an older woman" and the constant "Mrs. Robinson" jokes. It was stupid. Now in my 50s dating women 10 yrs older or younger isn't a big deal.

After late 20s people can do whatever they want. Their brains are developed and they are full grown adults. Plenty of people find themselves more mature for their age and want to date older. Older people sometimes find some younger people interesting if they are mature enough. This person however is a weirdo and immature as they matched just to talk shi to someone. Let them stay searching.

Age range being a deal breaker is a free feature. She was just as down as you were to match with the age gap. What a weirdo.

Like I've said before in this sub, a lot of people use dating apps to be assholes

Am I overreacting or is this weird to say considering he is overweight? My body vs his for comparison.
