Considering Power Beats Pro 2

I've had the PBP1 since they first came out and like everyone else on earth, I had the issue with the right bud dying after about 20 min of use. I swore to never go back to beats after paying $250 for buds that are faulty and the company did nothing for its customers. It really rubbed me the wrong way when I saw this was a widespread issue with no accountability from beats.

I recently purchased the Samsung Buds Pro 3 and as much as I loved the sound quality and ANC, I have IOS, so I couldn't get the most use out of all the features. They also were not staying in my ears just while sitting at my desk doing homework, so I'd def not trust them out at the gym or on the train. This is why I've never wanted 'stem' earbuds and I had opted for the over the ear hook PBP1.

I ended up returning the Samsung buds and actually considered going back to PBP2 just because when they worked, I really liked them, and was hoping that issue was resolved with their second gen buds. It seems the issue is NOT resolved and I won't take any chances. I was looking into the nothing ear buds, but again I really prefer the Sony XM4s, but it's definitely "there." Play around with the tip size. I got some foam eartips on Amazon and they improved the sound and ANC quite a bit.

If you don't like 'em, take them back, just like everyone else here ;-)

I agree. Changing to memory foam tips made the ANC better. And I think with less sound bleed through, the ANC doesn't have to work as hard and will improve battery life.

I have the pbp2 and have been loving them, upgrade from the first set in sound and the anc is good. Battery is lasting around 8-9 hours per charge.

Same, I have actually had them last more than ten hours but with podcasts or audiobooks. Not music.

I know of the "issue" you speak of. I have never had the problem.

Keep in mind this is Reddit. Not everyone comes on here with every good experience they have with a product. That being said, I'm sure that many of the people who do not like them are genuine. And they just don't like them or Apple, maybe they see the constant posts about them and want on the karma train.. idk and idc.

So try to imagine for every one who comes on here and bitches, there's probably hundreds if not thousands who are happy with them. Me being one of them.. and I have a lot of headphones/earbuds. And have had dozens over the years.

What it all comes down to is you. Only you will know if they are right for you.

If you do pull the trigger, get the Apple care. Use the shit out of them for a few weeks and return them if not satisfied. Use your CC for added protection for returns.

At the end of the day, if you don't like them you've only lost some time but gained some knowledge.

Best of luck, keep in mind that many of these reviews are total bullshit.

I sent mine back. They are not worth $249. I have had 3 PBP1 and love them. I was hoping these would be amazing, but they are just okay. Make sure you can easily return them wherever you buy them.

I'm on day 2 and I'm def feeling like they're not really worth $300 (taxes and AppleCare)
