Indoor grow has mite issue with 2-3 weeks left in flowering. finish them outside and save electricity?

This is the only time of year where i could possibly do this, since its about to be 12/12 outside in a few weeks. its 30-25 min more light than dark rn. My indoor grow has a spider mite issue, and i think they're stunted from all the defoliating and spraying i've done as a result. I had to cut the trellis out and so its not a perfect grow by any means, but i do want to finish them. Also, my tents carbon filter is starting to leak the loud into my house. i need a new one of those asap. Would it be wise to just take them outside and finish them in nature, and cut my energy bill losses on a grow that has mites? My outdoor plants are flowering just fine, and have random flys and a few actual spiders, but no signs of mite problems. I'd like to do this asap, but would those extra 20-30 min of day light cause them to hermie?
